

Draft 1

Do you believe in karma? Well, I believe it. I'm not a Buddhist, and neither am I someone who believes in any religious gods. But karma is most probably the only thing I believe in the world of religious thinking, because it is the only thing that makes sense to me, and it also promotes a good personality. In karma, whatever option you choose, you will always get a consequence. It is always because of something that leads to another back to yourself. For example, if someone has insulted you, and you take revenge on the person, you will be just like him, and on goes the cycle. Karma is a never ending cycle that determines what you will get from what you gave others.

In the past, I was once a very unforgiving fellow who always remembered all the bad things in someone, and took revenge on them like the way they had treated me, Whether the matter was small or big, I was petty about it all. It had never ended well, and I was soon all by myself. I never really thought about it much, as I thought that eh, all deserved those treatments.....

Until one night, when I coincidentally stumbled upon a movie about karma on TV. It was a very touching and funny love story about a wrestler who was once a Buddha that could see a person's past life, and a girl, whose past life was a Japanese general who had beheaded millions of people during the Japanese war. The storyline is about how this guy's attempt to help the girl do good deeds in order to make up for her past, before she gets her consequence in her former life. In the end, she was found beheaded on the top of the hill, and the guy went mad because of the death of her beloved girl. The guy sets of to kill the murderer. He found him, but during the last second of the fight, he stops and realized that if he kills him, he will become a murderer too, and he was going to be getting his own consequence. At that point, the ending of the movie was no longer important.

After I had watched the movie, I went to research more about karma, and I had decided to change and look at things in a new perspective. It has been years ever since I watched this movie. I had become a better person than in the past. What goes around, really comes around.
